Skyview unfurls Green Flag for environmental education

BY ANDY NYSTROM

Skyview Junior High's Green Team students proudly raised a Green Flag at last month's end-of-school assembly as the crowd's applause filled the gym.

The Bothell school not only garnered the National Wildlife Federation's highest honor in its Eco-Schools USA program, but Skyview is only the seventh school in the country to fly the large flag for its commitment to sustainability and environmental education.

When unfurled, the flag covered the combined width of about six students and instructors John Schmied and Tom Nowak.
"The National Wildlife Federation has been proud to work with Skyview for many years," Courtney Sullivan, the federation's education manager for the Pacific Northwest, told the crowd. "We started our relationship with you with your amazing school-yard habitat, (which) has been a model for other schools across the nation."

Skyview's Outdoor Environmental Learning Center is a student-tended, 6.5-acre outdoor classroom and service learning project in which volunteers have devoted more than 9,800 hours of service to create sus-
